Tiger Claws at Jewels.

Sol Frank of Petersburg, Ind., has a curlo in the matter of tiger's which is in the safe of the Palmer, House. The jewelery is made up of the vicious hooks on the feet of king of the cat tribe, set in gold, The gold clasps are moided to represent Indian gods and goddesses. There are bracelets, a necklace and earrings. The claws are perfect and are esteemed in India, whnce they came more highy than rubies. The constant combats of the tiger in jungle life break his claws, so that a complete set of them is very precous. These are two inches in length and carved like scimitars. The boxes which hold them are two and fashioned out of sold ivory. The larger box is said to be the largest pieces of solid ivory known; it is as big as a cigar box and made from a single

The tiger claws and their setting have a curious history. The set was made in Trichenoplis, India, bought in the bazaar of Murshidabad on the Ganges for £300. It pased through several hands and came into the possession of an American merchant in Peru, who lost his fortune in the Chilean war. It is now owned by an American, a friend of Mr. Frank. The latter has undertaken to bring it to the notice of jewelers. Marshall Field's private secretary is to see, and Mr. Frank is thinking of taking it to
